The conference is designed by Wendelin Strubelt and Detlef Briesen. The idea for this conference goes back to an earlier ARL conference on spatial planning and research in West Germany after 1945, held in Bonn in 2014 and which was followed by the anthology "Raumplanung nach 1945. Kontinuitäten und Neuanfänge in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland". One important result was that the development in the Federal Republic requires the systematic inclusion of the European perspective. This insight was the guiding idea of the publication "A New Beginning? Spatial Planning and Research in Europe between 1945 and 1975" which the editors, Detlef Briesen and Wendelin Strubelt, now would like to discuss with the authors and a wider audience at the conference now taking place.

Conference on 6-7 October 2022
in Berlin

BACKGROUND AND TOPIC

Spatial planning is typically European in its attempt to shape the development of societies by ordering their territories. It emerged in the 19th century: from colonial settlement plans and conquest projects, urban reform and conservative or even fascist fantasies of order. Bearing this legacy and further burdened by the Soviet planned economy, spatial planning entered a new epoch after 1945. Since then, the attempt has been to find a role for spatial planning in the reconstruction of Europe, along the path into modern society, mass democracy and mass prosperity. Therefore, parallel to social changes between 1945 and 1975, reform of spatial planning began from Spain to Germany and from the Netherlands to Italy.

At the conference, the history of spatial planning will be discussed under four main aspects with the participation of numerous renowned experts from all over Europe.

1) What was the influence of spatial planning in endeavours to cope with the extensive war damage after the end of the Second World War and how was its often-burdened legacy dealt with?

2) To what extent did spatial planning contribute to overcoming the new challenges brought about by the post-war boom and the development of modern mass democracies, especially in Western Europe?

3) How did European integration and the Iron Curtain affect the theories, methods and practice of spatial planning, especially since the 1950s?

4) What is today's legacy of the three decades of post-1945 spatial planning? How do we deal with failures and achievements, and can we identify role models and directions for action for the future?

The conference language is English.
